REPTILES AND DINOSAURS

Terrible Lizards

Dinosaurs dominated the Earth for 170 million years, from the late Triassic to the late Cretaceous periods, when the supercontinents of Laurasia and Gondwana were splitting into the landmasses of today. The mass extinction of the dinosaurs about 65 million years ago left fossil remains, including footprints, eggs, and bones. Finding these fossils has enabled scientists to study and classify dinosaurs and to learn about their posture, size, diet, and many other aspects of their lives. These studies revealed that this prehistoric group of lizards included herbivores and carnivores of extraordinary size and striking shapes.

Legs

Depending on their bodies, some dinosaurs walked on two legs, and some walked on four. However, they all had a similar posture. Due to the structure of their legs, they had little flexibility in their rotation/leg, mainly, because, for the most part, they were upright.

LEZARDS
The legs project outwards, at the elbows and knees, the legs are held at right angles. This arrangement is called extended posture.

CROCODILES
These animals have contracted postures. The limbs are held out and down. The elbows and knees are held at a 45° angle. These animals reared slowly and straightly on the legs.

COULDN'T WALK
Even the paleo-illustrations of the "Texas" had a contracted posture. Many of the bones of the forelimbs and hindlimbs were short and stout. This is the result of the contracted posture and the weight of the body.

The long neck was only because the weight of the neck was light.

Marsh vs. Cope

The American paleontologist Othniel Charles Marsh and Edward D. Cope found off in every possible way. They competed to determine who could find more dinosaur bones and species. The competition was played in the reception, not in the field.

Scientist of anatomy, Richard Owen, was the first to identify fossil remains of "terrible lizards" or "sauropods." He proposed the name Diplodocus based on the fossilized skeleton of a fossil for the Great Exhibition of 1851.

Saurischians

These dinosaurs had the same pelvic structure as birds, including the pubis and ischium. Many species of sauropods had long necks, including Mastodons and Apatosaurus. They had long necks and long tails.

Ornithischians

These dinosaurs had the same pelvic structure as birds, including the pubis and ischium. Many species of ornithischians had short necks, including Mastodons and Apatosaurus. They had long necks and long tails.

OTHER LEZARDS

Members of the Diplodocus family. They were up to 40 feet (12 meters) and weighed up to 17 tons (15 metric tons). They both were long-necked.
