Commentary on the power of Symbolism in Tayeb Salih's story: "A Handful of Dates"

The Wedding of Zein & other stories by Tayeb Salih, tr. Denys Johnson-Davies (London: Heinemann, African Writers Series, No. 47, 1969).

Tayeb Salih is Sudan's greatest storyteller whose contribution to both African and Arabic literatures is greatly recognized. His stories are celebrated for their high degree of originality, humoristic and symbolic airs as well as their incorporation of aesthetic and literary features.

"A Handful of Dates" is one of his best-acknowledged works. It tells the story of a boy depicted as a witness to the greed and ill-natured spirit of his grandfather who has gotten his wealth by craftily observing a neighbour, Masood, who inherited a good deal of land. He waited for the moments when Masood was under the greatest financial pressure--and that way, bit by bit over forty years; he took advantage of Masood's property, and gained possession of two thirds of his land. The grandfather described Masood as an indolent and a much-married man and thus, held him responsible for all the losses of land and wealth he suffered. The author showed the disgust of the boy to his grandfather's exploitation of Masood when he spewed up some dates his grandfather had taken over from Masood's land and had given him to eat. Though the story was tiny and brief, it did say and exhibit a lot of themes of interest and applicability to people of all cultures and ideologies. The fact that the story- along with other stories by Salih- was celebrated and translated into English by Denis Johnson Davies has helped in bringing about the recognition of Salih's skilled literary abilities, and has assisted in proving the undisputed importance and utility of translation as a tool to enhance and strengthen ties between peoples and literatures of the world.

Some of the achievements gained from translating this story into English are:

1. Contributing to the depiction and thus, the understanding of the natural habitat in Sudan as a model of an Afro-Arab community with the details of life based on love for and dependence on palm trees as major source for income and a criterion to measure power;
2. Strengthening shared beliefs about the universality of values and feelings towards them and depict their representation in Salih's literary works.
