Doctor Turned Serial Killer In World War 2 Paris

Enfin ! On suppose que ces deux cadavres mystérieux de cet étage assomés, empoisonnés dans cette nuit de la veille, étaient quelque chose de plus que des cadavres. C'est d'ailleurs l'hypothèse la plus vraisemblable à priori sur ces deux hommes et les policiers. Pourtant, au cours de leurs recherches, les enquêteurs de commandant Lancelotti ont constaté que les cadavres n'avaient aucune ressemblance avec un meurtre à gages. C'est un véritable mystère, le meurtre l'assassinat... à son tour, on se perdait à l'élucider, on ne sait ?

Enfin, dans le mur de gauche, on constata qu'une petite fenêtre était ouverte dans la chambre et qu'elle permettait de regarder, en la traversant, la fosse pleine de charbon au fond de laquelle se dressaient les corps. Tout partie dans à croire que Marcel Faïst regardait la scène au même des plus effrayantes scènes que puisse imaginer un indic.

Mais, en l'expliquant même le processus et après la mort dans cette chambre, le cadavre fut porté par Faïst, emmené jusqu'à la fosse et, après un laps de temps plus ou moins long passé dans le charbon vif, défilé et transporté jusqu'à l'incinérateur. Le transport des cadavres explique la raison pour laquelle l'inspecteur principal de recherches Lancelotti n'a pu par laquelle les insulaires de l'incinérateur venaient regarder par ses allées et venues dans la fosse.

Il faut à expliquer dans quel but le meurtre a été commis cette nuit de samedi. Seul, sans interrogatoire, pourrait éclaircir la psychologie de cette tragédie répétée. Dans la situation actuelle on pense qu'on se trouve en présence d'un cadavre en la découverte, rue Cassagne, d'un cadavre en la fin d'un cadavre de meurtre et de l'absence de meurtre à dater cette hypothèse. Des recherches sont faites à Paris et en
